The statements in this section merely provide background information related to the present disclosure and may not constitute prior art. The expression “natural language” refers to a vocabulary that can be used to represent a human language in digital form. “Natural language processing” is the discipline of analyzing natural language text for the purpose of recognizing the meaning of the text and/or the intent of the writer. A goal of natural language processing is to create a computer that can process sentences and recognize the basic meaning of the words within the sentences. Conventional natural language processing systems typically employ grammars for use as a language engine. Natural language processing can also be used to extract data from web pages and other data sources. For instance, one approach is to use a natural language processor to gather the text from a website, and then some other computer processes the text to derive a targeted set of data. This set of data could include the names of people who work at a company (e.g., company names), the number of employees of the company (e.g., company size), the titles of the people in the organization (e.g., titles), etc. Various natural language processing systems are used in a variety of fields. Some natural language processing systems include computer systems that assist users in communicating with each other. For example, a cellular telephone may include features that allow a user to communicate with other cellular telephone users or providers of web based products and services that reside in another cellular telephone network. People can communicate with each other using different forms of natural language. For example, people may converse using speech, text, e-mail, video, etc. Each person may need to understand the intents of the messages that are being communicated to them. Further, each person may need to understand what another person is communicating to them. For example, in a face-to-face meeting, two people are generally able to easily understand a verbal communication when one person is talking and the other person is listening. However, a conversation between two people via an e-mail or over the phone may take much longer to understand.
