The metabolic syndrome as a risk factor for gestational diabetes mellitus. To evaluate whether the metabolic syndrome was an independent risk factor for gestational diabetes mellitus and whether the individual components of the metabolic syndrome could be used to predict gestational diabetes in individuals at risk for gestational diabetes. In a nested case-control study, 11,175 pregnant women were evaluated for the presence of the metabolic syndrome, and their medical records were reviewed for the diagnoses of gestational diabetes. Women with the metabolic syndrome had a two- to four-fold increase in the risk of gestational diabetes compared with those without the syndrome. No single component of the metabolic syndrome was an independent predictor of gestational diabetes, but the coexistence of all three or two of the individual components significantly increased the risk of gestational diabetes. The metabolic syndrome was an independent risk factor for gestational diabetes. The individual components of the syndrome may not predict gestational diabetes, but the coexistence of all three or two or the individual components of the syndrome are all strong risk factors for gestational diabetes.

Dish Network Said to Seek Buyout Offer Dish Network Inc., one of the nation's largest satellite-TV providers, said it is considering an unsolicited takeover offer from telecommunications equipment maker Atmel Corp. The San Francisco-based satellite-TV network operator, which lost control of a product it developed in 1999 to Harris Corp. after it ended a joint venture with the company, was late last week questioned by Wall Street analysts about the chances that Atmel would follow through with a bid. Reassessing Dish's options, analysts said, could lead it to ask shareholders to approve the buyout. Dish shares fell $1.37, or 3.1%, to close at $13.30 on the
