This utility is designed to assist individuals change the default email account in Windows Live Mail to another one, along with changing the default Internet Explorer, Google Chrome, or Firefox web browser to another. The application does not attempt to ensure that all the new shortcuts are configured properly, and it's up to the user to configure them. In order to begin the setup wizard, you first have to add the application's bin folder to the Path variable, which is a text file residing in the C:\Windows\System32 folder. The location of the file is C:\Windows\System32\CONFIGSYSTEM environment variable. If the directory is not present in the variable, you can create it by opening it in the editor of your preference. The text file should be edited by changing the "DefaultMailAccount" value to the email address and click "Save". This step is not needed when working on a default computer, since the Path variable is automatically set in Windows. In doing so, you can also check if the email address you want to assign is in use or not. In case it is in use, you have to change the value "DefaultMailAccount", to "OtherEmailAccount" and then press Enter. After that, you can switch from "DefaultMailAccount" to the email address you want to assign. When you are finished, press Enter and the changes are saved. There is a lot of potential for other things Rhyme Description could do, but I figured it was best to start by writing something that does the rhyming well. Next the application was ported to SDL using the low level library, to make it cross platform. The end result is a program that works well with 32 bit and 64 bit windows. The code was written from scratch with some parts of it being the work of other open source projects. The application has an intuitive GUI with a dialog box and menu oriented interface. The GUI itself has been pared down to make Rhyme Description feel as lightweight as possible. The colors you see are simple to change, but the application has a number of scripted color changes, which change the colors randomly as it cycles through lines in the rhyme. The program is written in Object Pascal. Features - Automatic scrolling up and down of the rhyme - Full color support - Read the rhyme as it draws it - Cycle rhyme in a most user friendly manner - 6 colors to change - Read the rhyme up to the point where you choose to skip it - Can quit at any time 09e8f5149f
