The annual Sea Shepherd Conservation Society Sea Turtle Restoration Program runs the first weekend of December and up until the first weekend of April. Sea turtles are part of the native wildlife. You can do your part to restore the balance by providing safe nesting sites for sea turtles to lay their eggs and watch them hatch. Sea Turtle Monitoring Watching Sea Turtles is a great way to enjoy the sea and the wildlife! They are part of the native wildlife and, with a little effort, you can view them in the wild! See one? If it's a loggerhead turtle, it's good luck! If you catch a glimpse of a Green Sea Turtle, don't panic, it will only attack if it feels threatened. The Program The Program, Sea Turtle Monitoring & Protection, is supported by the Conservation Society's Sea Turtle Restoration Program. Sea Turtle Protection is a significant part of the Sea Turtle Restoration Program. The purpose of the Sea Turtle Protection is to make sure that sea turtles are not harmed by humans and that they do not continue to create problems that lead to their extinction. During the nesting season from February through April, Sea Turtle Protection teams are out in the field watching for any problems. Sea Turtle Monitoring is required to keep our Sea Turtle population healthy and sustainable. Sea Turtles return to the nesting beaches to lay eggs each year. This is a dangerous time for Sea Turtles because they can be caught up in nets and in boats, as well as killed by humans. If the populations of Sea Turtles are kept low, there will not be enough to successfully spawn and continue the cycle. Our Sea Turtle Monitoring team works to ensure that nesting beaches are safe for Sea Turtles to nest in, that the nesting females return to the same beaches every year

Pierce added: "I really don't want to wait around and if I can't go now then I won't do it in the future. "I would be spending the next two years trying to be a footballer. I would be wasting my time if I was looking at something like a flight. "I don't see any point in being a part-time footballer. I have signed a long-term contract and I'm just going to do everything I can to make it into the best team possible." Growth rate and molecular characterization of high-risk HIV-1 strains isolated in the southern region of Cameroon. To assess the growth rate and molecular characteristics of high-risk HIV-1 strains isolated in the southern region of Cameroon. Progression of HIV infection was monitored in 10 patients (median CD4 count at baseline, 93 x 10(6) cells/L) in a prospective cohort study. HIV-1 RNA was extracted from plasma and PBMCs and the genomes amplified by reverse transcriptase (RT) and protease (PR) gene amplification and sequencing. Sequences were
