For example, it works on my D-Link DIR-300, but not on my Logitech LBT-3120, or my SanDisk Sansa Select, or my Dell XPS 8300, or my Samsung SH-224. How can I fix this? Update: The HDDs are WD MyBook World Edition WD20EURP/WED, and they are formatted as NTFS, with no encryption. What could be the cause? A: Most likely the reason is that the drives aren't providing proper power information to Windows when they're connected via USB 3.0. Citing the documentation of the Power Delivery protocol for MyD-200: The following table lists the kinds of information the host is able to obtain from the device. Input power -- The input power supplied by the device in the event the host reports that the device is connected to an unplugged port. Voltage -- The differential supply voltage measured across the pins at the physical connector interface in the event the host reports that the device is connected to an unplugged port. Update To verify, try inspecting the device using Diskpart and look for the Power Delivery feature: (source: wikimedia.org) If the feature shows up, this should mean that the drive is available for this particular host but not available for the others.
