How to Build a Fashion Brand I know we are in a recession, but please stop spending money on top quality fabrics. Instead of buying expensive seam allowances, go cheap and add on a seam allowance that is larger. Since most manufacturers of fashion fabric have changed their widths and cut lengths (for example on gabardine), the difference is 0.5 inches. So with the new guys, even if you buy 0.5 inch, you will get more value from it than the king of fabric suppliers. Most of the r&d team have taught fashion to some of our teachers (with extra credits if they excel at it). Once they are practising, their repertoire of knowledge has quadrupled. So they are learning sewing too, this is direct feedback from the community. Designers are not having any creative room, so the more r&d they do, the better, and it will all be worth it. One of the key ingredients to building a fashion brand is to be able to borrow. If the designer can borrow a top 5 brands and show they have the basic skills to produce a product to their own specifications, they can then go out, design and source to widen their repertoire. The other key ingredient is your ability to get things started. This is more than most people think. It is more than having the clothes and finishing. It is about the business side. Right here, at the start of this very cool blog, you are building a fashion brand. Tell us if you have done something interesting. We will be keen to know. And by the way, let's form a community, so you can keep talking to each other. See you all in t-shirt
