1. Why should I use Photoshop Elements? Because Photoshop isn't Photoshop The original Photoshop came to be as a competitor to Apple's Macintosh. The goal was to offer a simple, intuitive experience for both everyday users and professionals. When Photoshop was first released for the public in 1990 it offered a bold new direction in image editing. With its large, layered canvas and sophisticated workflow, Photoshop offered photo editing that was beyond what consumers had previously been using. People were stunned. Unlike the image-editing tools that were prevalent at the time, Photoshop changed the way people thought about image editing. It was quick, it was intuitive, and it looked great. Despite its success, Photoshop was initially not widely used. Later, Photoshop fell out of favor when users no longer needed its professional tools. As technology advanced, Photoshop became more sophisticated and complicated. It also became harder to use. In the past couple of decades Photoshop has been improving to keep up with today's technology. It has evolved from a program primarily used by professionals into a more accessible application for everyday users. Photoshop Elements continues this trend by offering access to Photoshop's features while also providing an intuitive interface. Unlike some programs that were designed to be entirely different from the next version, Photoshop Elements uses an open process, or "lightning fast" development cycle. So, when Adobe Photoshop Elements 20 is released we will be able to get new features and updates more often. A professional works within a standard workflow. During the beginning of a project, the artist does some initial planning, composes a high-quality image and then quickly goes on to other parts of the project. In the editing phase, designers will often start by making a few changes, tweaking things as they go, and developing the image over the course of the week or month. In the final stages of the project, the artist may do a cleanup of the image, save it, and move on to the next job. That's an oversimplified flow for an average workflow, but it shows how quickly a typical day for a professional goes from idea to finished product. Designing, planning, and concepting are creative tasks that also involve finding the correct tools, gathering information, and creating a prototype before starting to edit the actual file. As long as Photoshop Elements continues to improve in the way that Lightroom does (with new features and performance improvement), it will continue to be 05a79cecf

Q: How do you get a "Corrected:" email and comment when a photo is resized on Facebook? Today I noticed my iPhone holding several pictures including the name of the page where they were found. I was pretty surprised because the pictures were extremely large, and I resized them to about 72 pixels. The photo was uploaded over a year ago, and I thought I was the only one using such large pictures. However Facebook says my picture was corrected, what does that mean? Is this normal? How can I get it to not happen? Is it the people or the software? A: What you are seeing is Facebook's "Pictures Resized" feature. You can get rid of this by going to Settings -> Privacy and going to the box next to "Other Use of Your Facebook Data". Daunomycin loaded solid lipid nanoparticles induced apoptosis in osteosarcoma cells through apoptotic proteins and mitochondria death pathway. Osteosarcoma (OS) is one of the most lethal type of bone tumors due to lack of early diagnosis. The present study was designed to evaluate the therapeutic potential of solid lipid nanoparticles (SLN) loaded daunomycin (DM) as nanoformulation against OS. DM-SLN was prepared by hot homogenization technique. DM-SLN was characterized for morphology, zeta potential, drug loading and in vitro drug release. In the in vitro cellular toxicity study, the results revealed that DM-SLN was more cytotoxic compared to free drug on MG-63 cells. Further, the in vitro release data showed higher release from DM-SLN than free DM. The cell cycle analysis revealed the phase I arrest at G0/G1 phase along with increase in sub G0/G1 phase during apoptosis in DM-SLN treated cells. The activity of caspase-3 and caspase-9 and PARP cleavage suggested apoptosis induction in the presence of DM-SLN. The apoptotic proteins caspase-3, caspase-9, Bax, Cyt c, PARP and Bcl2 were modulated in the presence of DM-SLN. These results suggest that DM-SLN significantly reduced cell viability, increased apoptosis of OS cells and activity of caspase-9 and caspase-3. The results suggest that DM-SLN could be a potential candidate for OS

Hundreds of thousands of people crowded the streets of big cities across the country on Wednesday to demand further action on climate change and its effects on the environment. The first of hundreds of "people's climate strikes" organised by school students across the world took place in Auckland, New Zealand. Organised by the New Zealand Youth Climate Coalition, over 5000 people took part in the protest in the Auckland CBD. Speakers from New Zealand's youth Parliament praised environmental activism and called on politicians to acknowledge the crisis. With the New Zealand government demonstrating little ambition in tackling the climate crisis, the activists demanded action as well as they rallied for a just transition to a low-carbon economy. Organisers for the Auckland strike said it was a "huge success" with "unprecedented numbers." While one woman told the protesters: "This is the first time that I've been in a crowd of this size - this is huge." Greta Thunberg, the 16-year-old climate change activist from Sweden, was one of the main organisers of the global climate strikes. Her speech in Auckland was watched by hundreds of thousands of people around the world. "The climate crisis is the biggest threat of our time, and it is much bigger than anyone expected it to be," she said. "I am here today not just to tell politicians that we are going to continue to strike, we are going to keep striking, until we get this working," she added. "I am here because we can do it, we must do it." Greta said the world was at a "critical point" in which the political class had failed to deal with the crisis, adding that this was "the moment we have all been waiting for." A big part of what was striking about Greta's speech is that she is not afraid to advocate for people power in the face of a system that is failing to protect those on the frontline of the crisis. "This is the moment for us to begin to organise against this system that we are all in," she said, adding that protesters must "take back the power." She said: "It is time for us to move from merely protesting into taking direct action." And Gret
