Similar news: Microsoft Office 2010 licenses: on-premises and online - BetaNews.com The developer preview of Microsoft Office 2010 has been released, and apart from a host of improvements for document-processing, there are also some new editions for licensing customers. Microsoft Office 2010 is a more expensive, and bigger, version of the Office suite than Office 2007, but you won't need to own a commercial license to use it. Both Office 2007 Pro and Office 2010 Pro can be licensed via the web or a phone, but it's another matter whether online or telephone licensing suits you best. The online suite is designed to be licensed in minutes, while the web-based version is a year-long subscription. The online suite allows you to download the OST files, which you then need to email back to Microsoft. The biggest difference is that you need the OST file, which usually is a copy of the.
