Q: Which JVM containers support multi tenant access

Are any JVM containers supporting multi-tenant access? It's strange that neither containers provided by Cloud Foundry nor Docker has this functionality. A: Do you mean when you want to give different containers/applications access to the same database? Do you mean when you want to host different applications in the same web container? But you shouldn't use JVM containers, but rather Spring applications, because the Spring Container includes support for multiple web containers. Q: Combine/merge two JSON I have two similar JSON to combine and merge. JSON 1: { "name":"a", "isMulti":"1" } and JSON 2: { "name":"a", "isMulti":"1", "displayName":"a" } I want to create a JSON: JSON 3: { "name":"a", "isMulti":"1", "displayName":"a", What's New in the?

USA Today Gary Sanchez is still going strong. Sure, he was hit on a ball into the dugout during a spring training game, but not a batting eye was out of place. Yesterday, we wrote about his two doubles in a game against the Orioles. Not only was he nailing the pitches, but he also made sure to close his eyes and put his head down for a nice pair of gloves. The Yankees cut Sanchez off right after their win against the Orioles, so he was unable to say if the swing had anything to do with him getting hit in the eye. If it wasn't that, then we might be scratching our heads. Yes, he has hit his share of doubles in the early going of his career, but the off-the-charts success is just not happening. He's currently striking out in 27.8 percent of his at-bats. Normally, that figure is lower than that, but as a catcher, he should have better success. This is not the first time it's happened either. Last season, Sanchez hit seven home runs and struck out 34.9 percent of the time. The other thing that's odd about his swing is that he has a.180 BABIP. Normally that figure would be up around.250. This is bad news if it stays that way. This is not to say Sanchez is not having a great start to the season. In fact, it's the opposite. He's collecting hits at a remarkable pace. He's third on the team in home runs with three. His batting average sits at a.294, which is the second highest on the team behind Aaron Judge. If you were to compare him to last season, he would be third in the majors in batting average and fourth in home runs. Gary Sanchez's First Half Gifs His overall OPS is.856 compared to.847 last season. Overall, Sanchez has hit seven home runs and is batting.294. Yes, he's going to hit some singles, but it's not sustainable if it keeps up. J. Meric/Getty Images When Sanchez was drafted, he was seen as a high-ceiling hitting prospect. The biggest knock against him was the oft-occurring swing and miss. At this point, it doesn't appear to be slowing down. In fact, it seems to be speeding up. It's
