Other popular plug-ins include the Liquify Plug-In (which changes the appearance of an image by distorting it), the Hue/Saturation (brightening and darkening an image), and the Smudge/Shadows/Highlights (slightly warming up and darkening an image). Since the beginning of software development, programming languages like Java, C, C++, C#, Python, and PHP have been used to create applications. But with the creation of the web and Web 2.0, developers use the web languages to create applications. The technology is now called JavaScript. JavaScript is a general-purpose programming language in the group of languages known as the client-side languages. It is a scripting language designed for interactive user interfaces. There are many JavaScript frameworks in the market that allow developers to easily create dynamic web pages that can react to user actions and change at any time. This explains why JavaScript is also called a client-side scripting language. JavaScript can be included in HTML or XML documents. Ex-RAF pilot to take part in London parade flying Duxford's aged aircraft Eddie Ellingworth, captain of one of the oldest aircraft in Europe, will be one of the first of three groups of WWII veterans to cross the skies over London on Wednesday 14th July as part of the Royal Air Force Association's annual celebration of its centenary. The 80-year-old ex-RAF pilot has taken the restored Duxford trainer out for the first time in over 50 years. To celebrate this feat he will take part in an event at London's Roosevelt Park on 14th July. A total of three veteran groups will fly the capital's skies in three separate aerial demonstrations. With everyone now focused on the questions around how much impact Andy Burnham could have on the Labour Party if he is elected leader, all eyes are on Labour's shadow cabinet in waiting. There is no doubt that with Corbyn's leadership the Labour Party has shifted to the left and the electorate has shown they are ready to back a party that shares their values. But one of the priorities for the party's incoming leader is to ensure that he has the support of the trade unions and this presents a particular problem for Burnham. In recent days, Burnham has said that he will not be able to block Owen Smith and his supporters from the party. Furthermore, Burnham has not ruled out the idea of trying to remove him from the party if he refuses to hand over the nomination to Jeremy Corbyn. There is no doubt that Burnham's opponents inside the party would relish the chance to remove him from his position, yet what they are almost certainly overlooking is that they would also lose the event they are staging on 25 September. In other words, any attempt to remove Burnham will almost certainly backfire. For one, the trade unions in Labour may not see it that way. They may be supportive of Corbyn's candidacy, but they may not want to see one of his big critics blocked from the leadership. More importantly, if the unions supported Burnham's removal from the party and he ended up being forced to accept the Labour nomination, there is no doubt that his foes would be celebrating with great glee. But they would be making one very, very important error – they would make it virtually impossible for Burnham to succeed
