Jamaica's ruling left-wing party is scheduled to hold the country's second-round elections early next year, making the nation's first change of government since 1987. John Woolley is Jamaica's prime minister. He spoke to The Associated Press on Sunday. This was the first time he had faced the people since the Sept. 25 runoff vote. CANDIDATES Elections officials say voters will choose between two candidates in January, and one of them will become Jamaica's next prime minister. The other is expected to become a senator in the upper house of parliament. "We have been working hard through all this time on a plan so that we can deliver a government that will turn Jamaica's economy around and make sure that the aspirations of the people are met," Woolley said. A return to democracy in Jamaica would be the culmination of years of political turmoil, starting with the time when the island's popular leader, Edward Seaga, was ousted from office in 1987. That led to a 10-year period of military rule and the assassination of Seaga, as well as the running of the country by a military government that pulled elections two years before Seaga's death. Woolley was chosen as the UN-backed successor in 1992, and the UNTAC peacekeeping mission took over operations until the 1997 elections. Woolley said Jamaica had made good progress since then. And he said the country was better prepared this time. "The economy is in much better shape than it was in '97," he said. The biggest single plank of the Lavalas platform is a proposal to raise bus fares and railway fares from 50 cents to $1.50. Such a proposal wouldn't be feasible to achieve until the government receives more money from sugar producers. Woolley told the AP the government would be seeking a $185 million loan guarantee from the World Bank for such a program. Such a program is unlikely to make the Lavalas campaign popular. Woolley said the government would make it clear that it was using the money to provide essential services, not for a presidential jamboree. The other main difference in policy between Lavalas and the PNM is a proposal by the opposition to give to low-income Jamaicans $20 each month for a Guaranteed Minimum Income. The idea has been introduced in other poor countries, but not

The Relationship between Bilateral Incisor Protrusion and Morphological Characteristics in Chinese Adults. To analyze the relationship between bilateral incisor protrusion and skeletal, dental, and soft tissue characteristics in Chinese adults. Five hundred eight cephalometric lateral radiographs of normal Chinese adults were evaluated using standard protocols and Landmarks. Five measurements were taken from each patient on an electronic caliper ruler. Bilateral incisor protrusion and incisor spacing on both sides were measured. Protrusion distance, crown width, lip height, and lip width were recorded on each side. The mean age of the patients was 27 years (standard deviation 6.1). The mean values of protrusion distance, lip height, and lip width were 5.03 mm, 20.63 mm, and 11.25 mm, respectively, on the right side, and 5.07 mm, 20.84 mm, and 11.43 mm, respectively, on the left side. There was a significant difference ( $P = .01$ ) in incisor protrusion between the right and the left sides. No statistically significant difference ( $P = .965$ ) was observed in lip height and width. The correlation between lip height and lip width was significant ( $r = 0.331$ ,  $P = .0001$ ). The mean difference in lip height and lip width were 0.7 mm and 0.79 mm, respectively. The skeletal and dental characteristics did not have a significant correlation with bilateral incisor protrusion. There was no significant difference in lip size and morphology in relation to the side of the bilateral incisor protrusion./
