What does this mean for a Numpy array of real numbers such as y? Does this mean all values below the tth quantile are quantized to 0 and all values above the tth quantile are quantized to 1? A: The documentation for numpy.quantile(): y : array_like, shape (n,) Target array, for which quantiles are computed. So it is trying to find quantiles for all the values in your array.

Then it will convert all the values below the quantile to 0 and all values above it to 1. What that means for your array of real numbers is, if your real number numpy array is called a: import numpy as np a = np.array([1.8, 2.5, -1.7, 3.3]) Then, you can get the lowest quantile from the array: >>> quantile(a, 0.2) array([0., 0., 0., 0.]) Then, you can get the highest quantile from the array: >>> quantile(a, 0.9) array([1. , 1.2, 0.8, 1.]) You can do the same for non-zero quantiles. Below the quantile: >>> quantile(a, 0.2, axis=0) array([[0., 0., 0., 0.], [0., 0., 0., 0.], [0., 0., 0., 0.], [0., 0.,
