
destruction of the lateral tibial cortex. CT scan showed a cystic lesion that was located between the metaphysis of the tibia and the joint and extended to the knee joint, and MRI showed the lesion to be located in the same area as the radiolucent lesion on X-ray. The cyst wall was thick, and a small amount of fluid was present. Based on these findings, a diagnosis of unicameral bone cyst (UBC) was made. The cyst was curetted. Postoperative therapy included treatment for osteomyelitis. The clinical course after surgery was uneventful. Although the pathogenesis of UBC is still unknown,
