Q: How to interpret these two sentences that show mutually exclusive opinions? I'm confused how to interpret two sentences that supposedly show mutually exclusive opinions. The clock is running late. This is not the first time it's happened. I get the first sentence and can understand it as meaning: The clock is running late. It has happened before. But I don't understand how the second sentence can be interpreted as showing the contrary opinion. How can "It has happened before" be a claim that "The clock is running late" is
