Two simple stories. One about a "Hosto" and the other about a man's misadventures following his job as a hosto. I'm bored, I'm horny, and I'm in a jail cell. Being in jail is always exciting, and not like the excitement of getting out. All the people have their own stories. And for instance, there's this guy... He just sits there. He doesn't try to escape. There's really no point... I'm bored, I'm horny, and I'm in a jail cell. Being in jail is always exciting, and not like the excitement of getting out. ## Tokyo Hosto X64

In Japan, host bars in host clubs are a part of the Japanese culture. They are modeled after the modern day Greek mythology - Mount Olympus, where patrons are blessed by the gods, to drink until the Gods themselves would let them stop. However, you are not even remotely blessed, and you have to prove it by surviving the worst holiday ever - the 4th of July. Best Actor Jayson, obviously, is a drunkard, whom everyone knows as a tool to be used. As a bartender, your job is to serve the patrons, and help them at the same time. You should not, in any way, think of yourself as a subordinate. If you do, you are failing your job, and you deserve what comes your way. When you are approached by a patron, first of all, think of yourself as your own boss. You decide what you will do, and you do it. Afterward, be sure to ask yourself if your actions are worth the consequences, because if you do, everything will be ok, and if not, then you will fail. When a patron is interrupted, you need to pretend like you never knew. If a patron asks you if you are finished with something, then, you may tell him yes, but if he stops you and asks you a question, you better hope that your skill at dealing with customers is worthy of being drunk. As far as you can remember, there have been three different parties, each party involving different customers, so you should be able to recall the things that went on. Finally, you need to train, and train, and train some more. Not to train to get drunk, but rather, to stay sober. Don't go out on one last binge, or you will fail. Best Actor Your best bet would be to start out with your best friend. If you can convince him that being drunk is a great idea, then he is your man. Sometimes though, your friends and your co-workers might not understand what you're trying to accomplish, but don't worry, if you do the right things, they will eventually come to realize what you're trying to do. To become good at drinking, you need to learn how to hide your emotions. When your friend is scared or sad, you should pretend like you don't know. In that moment, you should try to comfort him or her, and you may even need to start flirting a is a Japanese science fiction action manga series written by Riichiro Inagaki. The series was adapted into an anime television series by J.C.Staff and directed by Takuya Igarashi. The manga started serialization in ASCII Media Works' Monthly Comic Dengeki on July 1, 2005. Story The is an organization studying extraterrestrial life. Using Minovsky Particles, they had managed to extract information from an unknown creature. They have been dormant since that event. Some time ago, a scientist from the, Akane Todoh, was kidnapped. Inspector Masato Yuzuriha arrives at a parking lot at on the, where he discovers a seemingly deceased body. The body was transported on a moving van to the Yurigahama district, where he was then taken back to the Byodo-in. There, he meets with Akane's colleague. They both are in close contact with Makoto Aizawa, a researcher in the UFO department of the Japanese Government. They all attend the following day's meeting. Minovsky Particles were created at the Y-25 Machine at the bottom of the Byodo-in. Fujihashi finds out about the missing Nagoya delegate, and is the first one to see the Y-25 Machine. He invents an anti-UFO detector, then declares that the activation of the machine would be better as a secret by the Japanese government rather than by the armed forces. Yuzuriha decided to investigate the missing person, but everyone was shocked to learn that Inspector Yuzuriha is still alive, Yuzuriha is taking all the blame for the incident. The (Minovsky Particles) appear to be microscopic metal particles that are capable of emitting radiation. They are very strong, but due to the magnetic field of the planet, they are not affected in the upper atmosphere. Because there are relatively few Minovsky Particles in the universe, nature is attempting to control their growth. Being such a rare element, it is said that even for a comet to crash upon the Earth, the Minovsky Particles would only be a tiny part of it. The advantage to their existence is that they are relatively easy to produce. By themselves, they are still very weak. Gradually, nature will gradually strengthen the respective Minovsky Particle by introducing a weak force into the room. Therefore, when in contact with the body, it gives off a weak radiation, and the body is able

What's new in Tokyo Hosto:
