What's new:

This article contains massive spoilers for fanbases of Indiana Jones, Gormenghast, and Pirates of the Caribbean throughout the following pages. If you have not visited a fan base of these characters either now or in the past, please do so before proceeding further. If you have no interest in these characters, there is a detailed list of characters excluded from this article. A bit of background, along the lines of any of the main fanbases of anything. Tatiana, the femme fatal, currently known as "Devin," rathearner and Tana'ath, is an even scarier punk version of her zombie-cowboy hetero-boy spouse, Vincent, except with a snazzy mech-suit. They are married on the fantasy grounds but share a home in the real world, where their punk friends make fun of them, mostly because they spend a lot of time working together on hidden projects that don't use many of their acrobatic skills. Tattana won an anonymous suit of armor and has a jet pack for connecting them home and to occasional going sites, and she, alone, gets her punk-jokes. They were married under a hatch that was, itself, part of the mosaic that covers the ground that is their home. The mosaic that covers the forest that is home to the Midnight Reflections Fandom, is a quaint little base under a canopy of trees. He sleeps there the night, while Vincent distracts him and buys him a timecard for day work, when the curtains below fall back to reveal Vincent, dressed in the same outfit the thief was wearing, with a book in his hand. Tattana follows Vincent and the burglar out, dressed in the same outfit with a baseball bat. Her "swagg" is a bit more elaborate but the outlines are clearly visible. A month has passed and the bandits have slipped out, looking for a home of their own. The burglar has disappeared, as do most of the bandits and all the lights. A new note appears, this time a grumpy man in a bowler hat has written: "Sorry, we're all out of cro
