Cxworx CXworx is an American dance fitness show broadcast on the Pabst Blue Ribbon Late-night television network. It debuted on September 22, 1984. The show became a limited series in 1998, and ran for six episodes. The series later received a second series, which lasted eight more episodes. The program was renamed to "â€¢Corex,â€¢ and was renamed again when it was cancelled. The show featured the dance fitness classes: Body Pump (an aerobics routine), Tabata (a form of interval training), and Shout! (a contemporary dance technique). History Pabst Blue Ribbon, and its parent company, Franciscan Media, sought a dance competition to help launch the new cable channel Fuse. The network wanted to create a new program in which dancers could get technical feedback and competitive training on their dance moves. Created by former Prime Time Emmy winner, Ron Palillo, CXworx was produced by the Walt Disney Motion Picture Group, and ran on the newly formed Pabst Blue Ribbon. It was set to air at 11:30 p.m. on Tuesday nights. Initially the show hosted only aerobics, Tabata and contemporary dance classes, but an expansion of the dance fitness classes was added. CXworx was a big success with the audience, and sold a large number of the dance fitness classes. Within its first week, CXworx was close to #1 in the number of viewers. In June 1998, CXworx was picked up for a second season. It was renamed Corex, and included the dance fitness classes: Body Pump, Tabata and Shout!. The new Corex, premiered on August 27, 1998. On October 10, 1998, CXworx was cancelled due to low ratings. Its cancellation was unexpected, but Franciscan Media wanted the dance classes to be offered to other outlets. On January 10, 1999, CXworx was picked up for a six-episode limited series. The show, rebranded as "Corex", debuted on April 28, 1999, just under one year after the series was cancelled. The series aired on Tuesdays at 11:00 p.m. The show's final episode aired on May 5, 1999, the same night of the launch of Wheel of Fortune. References 0cc13bf012

We have talked about the pros and cons of one such library - Mongoddb and so we had to ask ourselves "Does Dynamo.js give us the flexibility and scalability that we need?". If you have any reason why we should or shouldn't use this library, please leave a comment. The answer to that question is YES! This just explains why I am proud to be a part of this project. Looks awesome. What's more, it comes with lots of "client-side" functionality which developers love to get their hands on. It's extremely simple to start working with this library, yet, it has a lot of features. After using it for quite some time now, I can say that I can highly recommend it. I still haven't met a single feature which is not included in this library. This is just the tip of the iceberg! If you are a web developer, you have to check this out. If you use Node.js, check it out as it is the only library, which is written in pure JavaScript and not coffeescript. I am very happy, that our friends at hackernoon have published an extremely in-depth article about Dynamo.js. They use it for a Medium project. You should read it to understand why I love this library so much. A hands on tutorial is available here. Conclusion As you can see, Dynamo.js has a lot of potential. By using it, we get good front-end-developer capabilities and still have the guarantee that we are not using a buggy framework. We should first consider the use-cases, which we want to achieve with this library. You will have to test the library yourself in order to decide what are your requirements. {{{data}}} id}}/update">Editor
