A: Did you verify the integrity of this file? If you did, you'll find that the checksum is wrong. Run these two commands in a Command Prompt window, and copy and paste the output in your question: `calc.exe /c "CRC32 /I.\5474c0b6.txt" echo %errorlevel%` This will calculate the checksum for a text file and display the result. If the checksum value is 506f3cf4, the file should be OK. But if the checksum is really 454f638b, that's probably a problem. Usually that is a virus scan going nuts (or a Trojan infection) If this is your first visit, be sure to check out the FAQ by clicking the link above. Comment Switching to Ext4 on Debian is still difficult. I imagine that is mostly due to the ongoing debate as to whether the UUID stuff should be used instead of device node names in the UUID file system. At any rate, it just isn't available yet. Comment That's what you want to do if you want to use LXDE. My question is how does that make it ext4? Well it doesn't mean LXDE uses ext4. That's just the official file system that is supported by Debian. If you meant that the distro comes with a new kernel, then I would say, yes that would make it ext4 if you had new lxde kernel. Linux is supposed to be portable, but you can never trust what some "designer" does. Comment I set up a few GNOME shell profiles (ie: different layout and color scheme for different devices) and I have a wishlist for the ability to switch from a GTK+ app to a Qt one and have the app adapt to the new profile (for example have a large font on a netbook and a smaller one on a tablet).
