According to Carter, Robinson's mother called, frustrated with her son's New England Patriots beating. She left a message with the Patriots medical staff, questioning why her son hadn't been checked on for three quarters. She insisted that he would be checked on for the injury, but shortly afterward, she received a call back from a Patriots nurse who told her he was fine. She was none too pleased with the lack of attention to her son. New York Post's Barry Carter says mother calls, gets a call from the Patriots saying her son is fine-she's fuming. pic.twitter.com/Xz9e5tf7rv — Mike Reiss (@MikeReiss) February 4, 2018 After the game, she went to Giants tight end Evan Engram's locker and demanded to know why he hadn't been checked on. She said she overheard a Giants trainer talk about her son's condition. "I asked about him and he told me he had an injury that he thought was had." I was like, 'Did you check on my son?' He gave me a weird look." Robinson didn't leave the stadium until after the Giants clinched the Super Bowl LII. It was a devastating injury for the Giants that they'll have to get over if they want a repeat trip to the Super Bowl in 2018. Robinson caught five passes for 69 yards, including a touchdown in the first half. Main menu Post navigation Many Thanks for the Best Gift Ever!
