Situating autonomy as the essence of the nursing process. Although nursing theorists and researchers have been concerned with some aspects of autonomy for many years, it is now being acknowledged that complete autonomy is not an attribute of nurses. Nurses cannot be completely autonomous. Even though it is impossible for nurses to practice without rules and regulations set by law and governing bodies, and even though nurses cannot be completely autonomous, nurses do have a responsibility to be free of mental, emotional, and physical constraints.

This article situates autonomy as the essence of the nursing process.Q: AWS Mobile Hub - Fail over from one account to another one Has anyone came across a
