It is a 1:1-1:1 splitter for multi-channel audio It allows demultiplexing of audio and/or video multiplexing into separate audio and/or video channels. It also allows audio and/or video stream multiplexing together into a single, composite, audio and/or video stream. It supports MP2, MP3, MPEG1, MPEG2, MPEG4, Vorbis and WAV file formats. It supports multiple formats of audio and/or video tags (AVI, MKV, Matroska, AVI, VOB). It supports layered media formats. It supports motion-compensated re-encoding of multimedia streams. This product is completely C++/CLI based without using any other MSXV software. This allows for easy deployment on all Windows and Linux-based platforms. This product combines CLI functionality as a live video and audio stream splitter and the object oriented technique for building any image-to-image video converter as a single package. With this product, you can create a customizable user interface for all popular multimedia formats and easily integrate it into your own application with a single source code file. This product is simple to use and you will find that almost any one of your tasks can be completed with a few clicks. It is very easy to understand, and the design allows the user to create a software solution with no training or coding experience required. It runs on Windows and Linux-based operating systems with minimum hardware requirements, yet will run quickly and easily on high-end personal computers. This product is still being actively developed and improvement is our number one priority. The original DVD, which contains the executable-only product, can be freely redistributed if possible. How to create a software to splitter a standalone audio/video file to multiple audio/video files at a certain size and with a certain specified folder structure as shown in the attachment. hi renoise master, i was havnig a problem and i have solved that thanks to you guys.
