Piano 3. 5. 9. 9. In the past, various methods for analyzing samples have been developed. There is a need for an improved method for analyzing samples, particularly if the samples are complex biological samples, such as small cell samples, for example, that contain other moieties besides the sample of interest. The present invention satisfies this need. Biological sample analysis, such as nucleic acid analysis, has, for example, long been an important tool in biology and medicine. Analysis of nucleic acids is of fundamental importance in molecular genetics, molecular medicine, virology, forensic biology, clinical biology, oncology, and in basic biomedical research. Nucleic acid-based technologies are powerful tools for screening, diagnosing, prognosing, and treating disease. For example, much of the progress in mapping the human genome has resulted from the use of these technologies.
Further, it is expected that nucleic acid based technologies, such as microarrays, sequencing by synthesis, and real time PCR, will be increasingly used for diagnostic purposes, identification of forensic samples, detection of mutations relevant to molecular diagnostics, and genotyping for risk assessment and predicting susceptibility of an individual to disease. The most common approach to nucleic acid-based analysis is to determine the presence of a nucleic acid sequence. This e79caf774b
