The objective of this study was to determine whether there are associations between hair color and hair texture and two types of skin in women. A total of 602 women (253 Caucasians, 333 Asians) participated in the study. Density of hairstyles of selected areas of the scalp was assessed by using a standardized hair brush. The color of the hair and scalp was assessed by using the Hia scale and the Root scale. The measurements of the peribulbar and periauricular skin were done on the lower back and on the scalp. There was a weak but significant correlation between the density of hairstyle and two types of skin (hair and skin), as well as between the types of skin on the lower back and on the scalp. The association between hairstyle and skin type was weaker in black than in Asian women. In contrast, the density of the hairstyle and color of the hair were very similar in blacks and Asians. We conclude that the color and texture of the hair have a weak but statistically significant influence on the shade of the skin. If such influence exists, it is minimal and does not vary significantly by ethnicity.4{ref-type="fig"}} are preserved as a small and distal vertical section. The suture between paired dorsal and anal fins is indicated as "*s*". In *A. dinema*, the suture between dorsal and anal fins is placed posterior to the ventral end of the dorsal fin

Prostate cancer is the most common cancer in men. Compared with other cancers, prostate cancer has few features that distinguish it from other cancers. However, several studies have indicated that PSA elevation in patients with prostate cancer must be distinguished from a variety of other causes of elevated PSA, so that the possibility of cancer is correctly evaluated. Thus, we aimed to investigate the effect of other histopathological findings on the elevated PSA level in prostate cancer. A total of 79 patients with prostate cancer, who had elevated serum PSA levels of >4 ng/mL and were admitted to our clinic for the first time, were included in the study. Following histopathological examination, malignancy was ruled out in 34 (43.0%) of the 79 patients with prostate cancer, and these patients were admitted to the adenoma group. The remaining 45 patients were included in the cancer group. We examined the serum PSA levels and age in the two groups. The two groups had similar levels of age (68.7 +/- 8.4 vs. 66.6 +/- 9.0 years). However, the serum P 6d1f23a050
