He was playing video games on his MacBook Air in the basement when he fell asleep, Charters said, and when he did not wake up hours later, she had no choice but to call 911, she said. A post-mortem examination performed by the medical examiner showed that Arthur, whose date of birth was listed as Oct. 30, 2009, had died from an accidental heroin overdose. He was 14 years old. The student-athlete's parents were at the scene when the ambulance arrived. Charters said that neither she nor Arthur's father, who was out of town for a business trip, told detectives that Arthur had been playing video games in the basement. His mother was unaware of the exact nature of his pursuits, she said. Police have told Charters that they spoke to at least one other person who said that Arthur had not been playing video games; the investigators said that they suspect that it was Arthur's 16-year-old roommate who led them to believe that Arthur had been playing games in the basement. After being told by police that he was suspected of lying to them, "I just don't know what to say to him," Charters said. "I had to tell him that we're going to get through this. I had to tell him to forgive us for not doing anything. I just kept repeating those things -- for as long as I could, because you never know when you're going to lose your child."
