It will reach Mars in August 2011 and use harpoons and drones to drill into the surface and deploy a stationary lander platform (Curiosity). Curiosity will use a laser-firing instrument to determine the chemical makeup of its surroundings, and will seek to identify chemical compounds that have the potential to preserve information about the environment in which life ever existed, and also look for evidence of habitable environments that may have existed at some time in the past. The lander will lower in to a tiny, airless crater called Gusev Crater in late 2012 and deploy an eight-legged, 250-pound rover called Curiosity (or MSL Schiaparelli, for Spirit). Details on the mission can be found here: This is officially a 3-D modeling application. There are three objects that are used to create 3-D models: 3-D objects in the modeling space, 2-D texture maps, and the mesh itself. 3-D objects for which textures are projected are used for the 3-D modeling space, and the texture maps project directly onto the 3-D object, without the need for a camera and projector. 3-D objects for which meshes are projected are used for 3-D texturing. A projection brush is used for adding textures. Projection brushes are available to project meshes. Objects can be grouped and can be segmented. Materials, lighting, shadows, and decals can be applied to an object. Models can be scaled, rotated, and moved. Voxel models have been included in this release, and there is a new language translator. There is a new modeling language translator, which will translate an EXE into an XML model. This translator is plug-in based, so it can be used with either real or imaginary models. The built-in language translator is based on the translator that is used by the VESTA (Visual Environment Simulation Tool) applications. It also includes an automatic translation that can be run on the fly, which converts from an EXE file into an XML file. These are now

A: It looks like you need to find a way to keep the content text but remove the HTML formatting. Q: Issue with Bootstrap 3 navbar I'm having an issue with my navbar.
 I've a partial view which renders some of my blocks. I'm using Bootstrap 3 and the Navbar does not show. It simply stays like an empty space on the page (See picture). Just to be clear, I'm using MVC4.0 with Bootstrap 3. The view is not rendered. The controller returns a Partial View. Here is my code: Sidebar Partial
