Eljardinperfumadopdf On You Tube Q: Why is a second request required to follow a redirect in a Spring MVC web application? I am using Spring MVC with Hibernate. I have a redirect in my action method. I've noticed that any request that follows this redirect requires a second request in order for the redirect to actually take effect. public class MyController { @RequestMapping("/") public String showHome(Model model) { //... do stuff // proceed to the redirect return "redirect:/model-list"; } } The GET request to /model-list?action=list, which would normally redirect the user, will instead re-fetch the /model-list resource. I found this very confusing because I think the MVC architecture should be able to handle something like this automatically. Also, if I am using it correctly, I don't have to worry about race conditions. Is there something I'm missing? A: If you want to stay with the Spring MVC framework, you should listen to the thredirect event on your model. With Spring 3.2, the following code works as expected: @Controller public class MyController { @RequestMapping("/") public String showHome(Model model, HttpServletRequest request, HttpServletResponse response) { //... do stuff // Proceed to the redirect return "redirect:/model-list"; } } @Controller public class MyModelListController { @RequestMapping("/") public String modelList(HttpServletRequest request, HttpServletResponse response) { //... do stuff } } Spring is quite capable of handling this for you, so if you have to manually handle redirections, you'll have to define a filter in your WebApplicationContext to catch the redirect and do a redirect instead of returning the response. You can do this with HandlerInter 6d1f23a050
